

I am on Indiana's telephone privacy list and I can assure you that it is very effective. I used to receive 3-4 calls daily for sales pitches that I have no desire to receive. Since being placed on this list I receive about 1 call a month and these calls are from people we have accounts with that want to tell us about their latest thing. It is so nice to not to have to answer calls from obnoxious sales people who do not know how to take no for an answer. I do not feel that the FCC should implement any proposal that lessens the telephone privacy protection that I already enjoy in Indiana. I feel that it is my right as a private citizen to able to enjoy my time at home without the interruptions of unwanted telephone calls and I should not be forced to pay for additional services such as caller ID to enable myself to be free of those phone calls. Being forced to use caller ID is just as disruptive as answering the phone and having to argue to people on the phone. The system is working well in Indiana and I for one, do not wish any changes that will lessen the protection I already have.

Thank you for listening to my concerns.

Sincerely,
Shellia Shelton
